Thomas Adès

Asyla, Op. 17 for orchestra (1997)

In 1993, Adès was appointed composer-in-association to the Hallé Orchestra in Manchester, England. In 1994 he composed first The Origin of the Harp for the orchestra and then in 1996 he wrote These Premises Are Alarmed; in 1997 he wrote Powder her Face as well as Asyla. Asyla was commissioned for the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra and was first performed, Sir Simon Rattle conducting, in October 1997.

Powder her Face may last longer, but Asyla is Adès's biggest piece to date: a 22-minute, four-movement 'symphony' for large orchestra including six percussionists and two pianists (one playing both a grand and an upright piano, the other an upright tuned a quarter-tone flat). 'Asyla', plural of 'asylum' is a title deliberately ambivalent, containing the senses of both 'refuge, sanctuary' and 'madhouse'. Matias Tarnopolsky, an early commentator on the piece, suggested that 'the first movement evokes a sense of motion across open spaces, the inner two movements take place as if in an enclosed setting, and the finale bursts these confines to provide a final, unexpected release'.

From a patterned pealing of cowbells, there steals a long horn melody; maintaining its basic shape, it gradually extends its span and spreads to other instruments. Urgent little trumpet riffs open a new section, and there's a compressed recapitulation. The slow movement suggests glints of brightness within a large, dusky space. A bass oboe sings a long, sequentially falling melody. Very shortly, divided strings adapt from the first movement a poignant chromatic descent. The scherzo, subtitled Ecstasio, begins softly, on divided strings, but swells to a thudding dance, a sort of Rite of Spring cum disco. Over the 4/4 bass beat, other instruments have intricate cross-rhythms. In the finale, a deep tuba tune moves slowly beneath a 'canopy' of cowbells and woodwind. Earlier ideas are superimposed. The close brings a sense of asylum gained.

Tristan Keuris

Arcade (1995)

Duration: 14'30

For: Orchestra

Commissioned by the Architecten Cie. for the occasion of the inauguration of the Radio Music Centre in Hilversum on 20th January, 1996

Written for the Radio Philharmonic Orchestra

Arcade, subtitled 'six more preludes for orchestra', is the last work that Tristan Keuris completed, following the Symphony in D and the Violin Concerto No. 2, all of which were written in 1995. The subtitle refers to the Three Preludes which Keuris wrote for the Kondrashin Competition for Conductors in 1994

Although following the Three Preludes and Arcade Keuris in fact played with the thought of increasing the total number of preludes to 12, and thereby creating a sort of 'Livre d'orchestre', he abandoned this idea shortly before his death. The title Arcade refers to the origin of the commission: at the request of architect Carl Weeber, Keuris adjoined six basic concepts of architecture in an arcade, a series of arches supported by pillars – a gallery of columns. Aureole is an oval form containing an image of Christ. A radiantly luminescent, upwards striving music. The Campanile is a separate bell tower. Keuris made not the slightest attempt to imitate bells, but rather to awaken the festive mood called forth by the sounds of bells. At the very most, there is a vague reference to English-style bell-ringing through its constantly changing patterns. Colonnade consists of static, colorful, rather mysterious chords, which occasionally evoke a strong recollection of the music of Messiaen. The Arabesques recall the playful character of all kinds of leaf and flower figures strewn about, and also more abstract patters. Impressive is the ceremoniously introverted Cenotaph, a grave-stone for someone buried far away. A brilliant Cornice serves as the conclusion of this gallery of columns, the decorative uppermost ring of the column and the crown of the work. Each of the six sections of Arcade is a true jewel of craftsmanship, fantasy of sound and musical storytelling.

Dedicated to the Netherlands Radio Philharmonic which gave the first performance on 20 January 1996, conducted by Edo de Waart

Leo Samama

Translation: Timothy Patrick Donahue
(from booklet CD Emergo Classics 3933-2)

Keuris's compositions were published by Donemus until 1987; later works were published by Novello of London. The vast majority of Keuris's music has been written on commission.

Tristan Keuris died on 15th December, 1996 in Amsterdam.

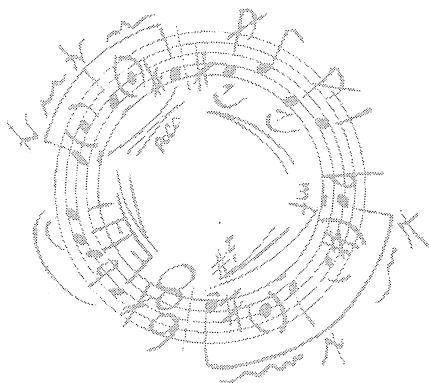

R. Murray Schafer

Manitou, 1994; 23 minutes; full orchestra; Arcana

The commission for Manitou has been arranged by my friend Toru Takemitsu for the International Program for Contemporary Music Composition at Suntory Hall, Tokyo, and was premiered there in 1995 by the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra. The idea for the concert was unique and could be repeated elsewhere. The commissioned work was to be the centerpiece of the program; but the composer was to choose the whole programme, which was to consist of a composition from past repertoire that had influenced him and a work by a young contemporary composer of promise. I gave them the option of performing Janacek's Tarus Bulba or Nielson's Inextinguishable Symphony (they chose the latter); and for the young composer. I selected Chris Paul Harman, who accompanied me to Tokyo.

For my own composition I wanted to create something with a distinctly Canadian theme. Manitou is the Algonquin word denoting the “mysterious being” who, for the woodland Indians of North America, represents the unknown power of life and the universe. Sometimes Manitou is associated with the sun to suggest omnipotence, though, like the Christian God, he is unseen. When I discussed native spirituality with a Manitoba Indian he kept using the word “monster” to describe Manitou and mentioned that his people used to believe that lightning was a serpent vomited up by him.

I spent the winter months of 1993 – 1994 in Manitoba, the province of Canada that takes its name from this “mysterious” god. In Manitoba the winters are long and harsh. Sometimes the thermometer remains at twenty degrees or more below zero for weeks on end. But the days are sunny and over the relatively flat and treeless landscape the skies seem enormous. It was during these times, in the pleasant studio provided by Brandon University that I sketched out Manitou and I have no doubt that the climate, the geography and the “mysterious being” contributed strongly to the shape and character of what was written there.

Thomas Adès
(b. 1971, London, England)

Thomas Adès began his musical career as a pianist, leading many to believe he would follow only the path of performance. He spent time studying composition during his studies at the Guildhall School of Music and at King's College, Cambridge. In 1990, Adès' finest composition, Five Eliot Landscapes was premiered. Many successful compositions soon followed, thrusting Adès into the world of composition.

In 1995, Adès composed a chamber opera, Powder Her Face, which received real international recognition, referred to as "England's most promising young composer" (Die Welt). His compositions have been featured on five recordings (EMI) since 1995 as well as a DVD.

Although his success as a composer has been great, Adès has not limited his experience to composition alone. He has also remained a much sought after pianist and conductor. Among other projects, he is also an Artistic Director and Professor at different institutions across England.

Our featured work Aryla, was Adès' first large-scale orchestral work. Premiered in England, in 1997, Aryla received such acclaim that the piece was immediately toured across Europe. It is a 22 minute, four movement "symphony" for large orchestra, including six percussionists and two pianists! The title, "Aryla", is intentionally unclear. The plural form of asylum, Aryla refers to the ideas of refuge, sanctuary, as well as "madhouse". Listen for a sense of motion across open spaces in the first movement, the inner movements occurring as if in an enclosed (perhaps restricted) setting and the final movement bursts these confines to a final, unexpected release.

Tristan Keuris (1946 – 1996)

Tristan Keuris studied composition with Ton de Leeuw at the Utrecht Conservatory from the time he was fifteen, after first having studied with Jan van Vlijmen in his native city Amersfoort. For a short time he also followed lessons in music theory at the Utrecht Conservatory with Joep Straesser. In 1969 he concluded his studies and was awarded the Prize for Composition.

Next to his activities as a composer, Keuris has also taught composition at various conservatories; he has held an appointment at the Hilversum Conservatory since 1992.

Keuris's music has been performed by, among others, the leading Dutch symphony orchestras (including the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra), the Raschèr Saxophone Quartet, the Houston Symphony Orchestra and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra. In 1975 Keuris was awarded the Matthijs Vermeulen Prize for the orchestral piece Sinfonia; in 1982 he won the Culture Award of Hilversum, the city where he had lived from 1976 until his death.

R. Murray Schafer
(b. July 18, 1933, Sarnia, Ontario)

Composer, writer, journalist, educator, dramatist, scholar, visual artist and soundscape pioneer – a lengthy list that aptly describes the extensive career of one of Canada's most important composers – R. Murray Schafer. Over the years, Schafer has expanded his musical style to include pieces for voice, instruments as well as impressive multi-media works. His interest in mysticism is obvious in pieces such as his Patria and new works including Thunder: Perfect Mind.

In the 1960's, Schafer lived in Vancouver, British Columbia while teaching at Simon Fraser University. There he developed an interest in the acoustic environment. He set up the World Soundscape Project which is dedicated to the study of the relationships between people and their acoustic environment. Schafer's interest in the soundscape has evolved into inspiration for his compositions. A good example of this is his String Quartet #2 "Waves" which has a rhythmic structure based on the intervals at which ocean waves crest.

Around the same time that Schafer was working with Soundscapes, his compositions began to draw on diverse mid-20th century compositional techniques, ancient and recent cultures as well as mythology and symbolisms of modern life. These interests are apparent in his multi-media studies on 20th century urban themes of alienation and psychoneurosis.

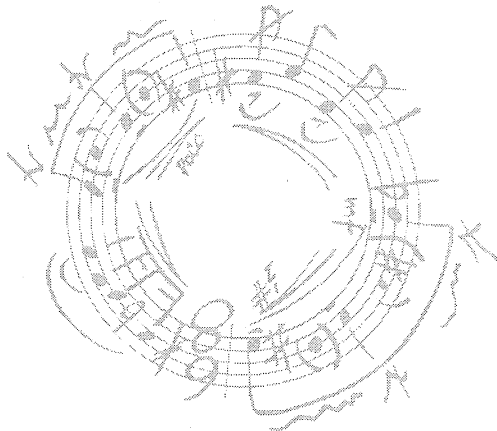

One of Schafer's most well known accomplishments is his creation, Patria. Begun in 1966, Patria is a 12-part cycle of musical/theatrical works frequently requiring audience members to be active participants. Blurring the divide between performer and audience member, Schafer has worked towards evolving the confines of traditional opera to what he calls "theatre of confluence".
